Grey Hope

Grey Hope is the first solo exhibition in Wales of work by British artist Jessie Brennan. Jessie is an artist working in the discipline of drawing within a socially engaged practice. Her works explore ways of recording, preserving and inventing possible narratives often in response to a particular location or situation. The work investigates our psychological interpretation of place and time, in which presence and absence reveal shadowy spaces, be that childhood, animal/human or landscape. More specifically, Jessie's work employs a meticulous drawing process, in which miniature figures and props populate a grey, hybrid world. Somewhere between the real and the imaginary, the work investigates the nature of local mythologies constructed by our collective memory. Her practice analyses the process of drawing as a form of preservation – works are in a sense a spell against loss.
